

Jasmine Glover-McNamara

Jasmine works as the Deputy Director for the City of San Bernardino Department of Animal Services. Before this, she spent nine years with the County of Riverside Department of Animal Services, working in several leadership roles. She holds a Master of Arts in Organizational Leadership from Cal Baptist University, and is passionate about providing servant leadership, translating this philosophy into public service, and helping people and animals.

Jasmine recognizes the need to advocate for abandoned and lost animals through community education, microchipping, and spay and neuter efforts. She recognizes that there is no easy answer to the abundant supply and meager demand issues for stray pets afflicting the City of San Bernardino. However, she hopes to implement innovative ideas to help relieve some of the burden on our shelter. Jasmine and her husband are avid hikers, recently summiting San Gorgonio Peak, with plans for Mt. Whitney soon and the entire Pacific Crest Trail in 5 years. Together, they have five children active in church, football, soccer, and sprint car racing. Their two dogs are Rufio and Floki, and they have a corn snake named Jesse.
