

Emily Teiko McCall

Aloha! I got my start and passion for animals when I started as an intern volunteer with the Honolulu Zoo. From there, I became interested in the more clinical side of animal care and began my journey to become a veterinary technician. I've worked in private and corporate practices across the US for more than 10 years. In my time in practice, I began to see how the culture surrounding this field, while filled with an abundance of compassion and empathy for the animals, there was a starvation of these same basic elements within these care teams. I began my focus on care for the care givers, working on creating environments and the space, filled with grace for these dedicated workers. I hope that through this course I grow as a leader to expand my lexicon and reach to better serve my current staff and this often misunderstood and ubiquitous industry. I look forward to working with and learning from everyone.